City of Houston Public Works Wastewater Construction Project Begins in Weeks

The City of Houston's Public Works Department will begin an 18-month Energy Corridor wastewater diversion project in just a few weeks. The construction will intermittently disrupt traffic along stretches of Park Row and Eldridge Parkway.

The city's public works' team provided information and answered questions during a virtual meeting Thursday January 20. A recording of the meeting can be found here.

The $39.9 million project will abandon the Park Ten Wastewater Treatment Plant and divert wastewater to the Turkey Creek facility. The project will be completed in five phases beginning on Park Row. Each phase will include lane closures and will eventually impact Eldridge and Memorial.

More information on the project can be found here.
